Are you between the ages of 18-35?

Have you been self-employed? Have you worked in temporary fixed term, or part-time work with irregular hours?

Then we'd like to invite you to share this with us!

There is a growing awareness of the extent of precarious work – especially for young adults. According to one view, more and more young people are being locked into insecure employment. Jobs that were once a job for life have become a job for the week – if you're lucky. Another view is that young people are now self-starting individuals who can build their portfolio careers and take responsibility for their own futures.

The social implications of precarious work project is a collaborative project between FEPS (Federation of European Progressive Studies) and TASC (Think-tank for Action on Social Change).

We'd like to hear your thoughts by inviting you to an informal discussion with a member of our team. We'd like to know how this type of work affects/affected your life. The interviews will last approximately 40 minutes and the information you give will remain completely confidential. If you would like to talk to a member of the team and find out more, you can contact
